Gen AI endorsement for CyberRiskConnect

Many companies are investing in developing their own Generative AI to improve efficiency, improve customer experience, and unlock many new possibilities. They must also be mindful of the risks that come with it, such as potential misuse, compliance issues, and the need for robust safeguards to ensure responsible and secure deployment.

To help, AXA XL created a market-leading endorsement for its cyber insurance policy CyberRiskConnect, to extend coverage for specific risks that businesses may encounter when building out their own Gen AI model.

The new endorsement provides coverage to address three specific Gen AI risks:

Data poisoning

a type of cyber-attack, that involves manipulating or contaminating the training data used to develop machine learning models.

Regulatory violations that may result from new regulations such as the European Union's AI Act, legislation aimed at regulating the development and deployment of artificial intelligence (AI) systems.

Usage right infringement can occur when appropriate permissions are not obtained to use particular items or data, such as copyrighted materials, software licenses, and intellectual property.

The new CyberRiskConnect endorsement is available on policies throughout the U.S and Canada, U.K. and Lloyd's market, and Europe and Asia.

AXA XL offers a range of cyber insurance products and services globally to help businesses protect themselves against cyber threats. For more information, please contact a regional colleague below:
